EDWARD PUTNAM CURRIER

To the Members of the Class of 1909:—

This report presents to the Class the most recent and complete list of the whereabouts of its members and of what they are doing. It attempts merely to provide you with as accurate a directory of the Class as is obtainable at this time. There have been many changes to record, some of which we have doubtless overlooked. The list of men not heard from is not unduly large. It can be materially decreased if you will scan the list carefully and report to the Secretary information that has not reached him. Our Class list is large and, as such, requires painstaking work to keep in touch with all the men. No Class can afford to lose track of any of its members. We need the interest and enthusiasm of all those men regularly enrolled on the Class list in the First Report and it is the ambition of the Class Committee to keep that interest alive.

The Secretary is greatly indebted to the Alumni Association for its assistance in preparing this Report. The compiling was done under their direction and has proved eminently satisfactory.

Yours sincerely,

ARTHUR GOODRICH CABLE, Secretary.

OBITUARIES

JAMES GARFIELD BALDWIN, son of Merton and Arminta Robinson Baldwin, was born at Bentley Creek, Pa., February 25, 1886. He was the eldest of three children. When he was five years of age his parents removed to Wellsburg, N. Y. There he attended the village school. He passed his regents' examinations and entered the Elmira Free Academy in the year 1902. In 1905 he was graduated with honors and was chosen valedictorian of his class. He entered Harvard University the same year (1905), but remained only one year because of ill-health. He accepted a position on the road with the Elmira Sales Book Company in the south, hoping thereby to regain his health. Later he accepted a position with the White Automobile Company, of Cleveland, O., where he made rapid progress. Close application to duty, as in his school work, finally compelled him to return to his home in the East, where after a lingering illness he passed from this life to the Great Beyond, July 20, 1909. His body was placed in Mountain View Cemetery at Wellsburg, N. Y., where he had spent the earlier years of his life. James Baldwin had so much sunshine in his soul that it reflected light all around, and gained for him a host of friends. He was most popular at school among his fellow students as well as on the street, where he always had a cheery greeting for old and young alike. He possessed a wonderfully attractive personality, never to be forgotten by any who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. Enemies he had none. He was gifted with a fine intellect, a keen, discriminating mind, and was always in touch with the finer sentiments of life. He was thoughtful of others and most appreciative of kindness. Surely eternity will be the brighter for his presence.

S. H. M.

HUGH CLINTON BENSON

How sweet and gracious even in common speech
Is that fine sense which men call Courtesy.

James T. Fields.

In so short a span of life as in finite numbers we count but one score and six years, Hugh Clinton Benson wrote with ineffaceable lines a record of gentle deeds upon time's infinite scroll. He was born December 5, 1882, received his youthful education in Jamestown High School, from which he was graduated with honors in 1903. In the autumn of 1907 he matriculated at Harvard, continuing a course of instruction begun in 1904 at Syracuse University. In the following spring he was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Henderson, of Syracuse, and to them was born, November 5, 1908, a daughter, Ethel Louise. This little home circle, formed with high hopes and bound with all the tender cords that youthful love may engender, was broken by the death of the young husband and father, December 8, 1908. Sorrowing parents, bereaved of your first-born, fond sister, mourning devoted brother, girl-wife grieving for the loving mate, tiny babe unconscious of your bitter loss, what a world of brightness was obscured when the King of shadows claimed your best-beloved! And not only were the sacred home ties severed, but countless bonds of intimate friendship were sadly broken by the cessation of this gentle life. For Hugh Benson possessed in an exceptional degree the faculty of making and retaining friends. With him, the pleasant word was the natural one. His feelings were kind, his intentions unaffectedly pure and good, his smile their natural exponent, his hand responsive to his heart's everhelpful impulse. We speak in our ineffectual human phrase of the death of such a one as untimely, yet who may presume to estimate the beneficent influence of this little quarter-century of life which so perfectly embodied Philip Sidney's definition of a true gentleman: "High erected thoughts seated in a heart of Courtesy."

M. R. W.

JOHN PHILLIPS BIGELOW was born at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, January 25, 1887. He spent his boyhood in Milwaukee and at an early age entered St. Paul's School at Concord, New Hampshire, where he prepared for college. He entered Harvard College in the fall of 1905 with the class of 1909. On account of his bright and sunny disposition, he became a great favorite with his own class and all those with whom he came in contact. During his freshman year, by keen competition he won the position of assistant manager of the freshman football team. Through this position he came in close contact with the principal men of his class and served on various freshman committees. He had a great love for music of all sorts and his principal recreation was in one of the musical clubs for which he played one of the mandolin parts. The early part of his sophomore year he was chosen second assistant manager of the Varsity football team. He gave up the rest of his college life to the duties connected with this position. Bigelow had the respect and admiration of everybody who was fortunate enough to have known him. He stood for the highest principles of manhood and cleanness in sports. He was constantly arguing the advisability of square play in preference even to victory. During his brief college life he was always associated with every movement in his class or in the University that would be of benefit to his fellow men. He was extremely democratic in his acquaintances, choosing his friends from all ranks of life and preferring to ask himself when choosing a new friend not "Who is he," but "What is he." Bigelow died at Philadelphia, April 25, 1907, at the end of the Easter recess of his sophomore year, from the effects of an operation for appendicitis. In him the University lost one of its most loyal sons, Milwaukee one of its most promising young men and the country one of the best types of American citizenship. As long as there is a member of the class of 1909 living he will venerate the memory and mourn the loss of this noble young man.

WILBUR SANFORD BLAKESLEE was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., on November 2, 1881. In 1893 he removed with his father's family to Rutherford, N. J. He was graduated at the Passaic, N. J., High School at the age of sixteen, and afterward commenced the study of music in New York City. Later he went to Berlin, Germany, spending three years there and in Paris, studying music and languages. Returning, he became a student at the University of Chicago in the fall of 1906, where he remained one year. In 1907 he entered Harvard in the junior year of the class of 1909. His taste for and proficiency in the German language led to his engagement, in the summer of 1907, as instructor in the German department of the Chautauqua, N. Y., Summer School. He had just returned there as instructor in 1908, when he was stricken with appendicitis from which he died on July 12th.

JAMES WILLIAM CARR BOWDEN was born at Port Chester, N. Y., July 2, 1888, and died of typhoid fever at Yonkers, N. Y., October 6, 1907. Educated at the Halsted and Yonkers High Schools, he entered Harvard with honors in the fall of 1905. Bowden immediately caught the spirit of the University and, while small in stature and knowing he had no chances for the freshman football team, nevertheless, went out for the squad with the idea of doing his share on the scrubs toward making his class team a success. Being dropped when the squad was cut, he went out for the Crimson determined to find some branch of college activity wherein he could "do something for the University." He also was a member of the "Cercle Français." Bowden belonged to that vast majority in the University who take the rough work of the scrub team and furnish the competition for the papers and who, by their very spirit of doing something, no matter how small, cause to be brought forward the very best individual ability in the University. So keenly have they forced the competitions that by their efforts the best has been obtained. Hence it is that those who knew him well felt so sharply his loss because they recognized so well his good qualities and sterling character. Throughout his college life he gave the best that he had toward the University, fulfilling in his small part the duties and responsibilities which fall on every man who enters Harvard.

FRANCIS HARDON BURR, First Marshal of 1909, was born in Chestnut Hill, Mass., on September 15, 1886. He died in a private hospital in Boston on December 4, 1910, after a long illness of typhoid fever. Burr came from thorough Puritan stock on his father's side, the first ancestor of the Burr family being a Puritan clergyman who came to Boston in 1630. His mother's mother was the daughter of Dr. James Barr of New Ipswich, New Hampshire, a man of Lowland Scottish ancestry. From the Barrs he seems to have inherited that high sense of duty which so characterized him. As a child, Burr was large for his age, but never seemed to outgrow his strength. He was always straight, alert and muscular. From his earliest childhood he was exceedingly nervous and unusually susceptible to disease. It is hard to believe that the big rugged physique which we knew in Harvard College could have suffered so many illnesses. His first schooling, in Chestnut Hill, was interrupted when his family took him to Berlin at the age of nine for two years. From then on his father, Heman M. Burr, of the Class of 1877, directed a good share of his early preparatory work. The summers were spent together on the Maine coast in close intimacy. At eight years he was the regular catcher on the small-boy team in Castine, not because he was fond of the catcher's position or was particularly adept in that capacity, but because no other boy on the nine could "hold" the pitcher without flinching. In 1902 he secured enough points to enter college with credit. The following year was spent at Noble and Greenough's School in Boston. It was a very happy year for him. He played on the eleven and on the nine and was a shot-putter on the track team. In spite of these distractions, he offered several advanced subjects for his final examinations and was admitted in June, 1903. The following year was spent in Europe with his parents, it being deemed inadvisable to send him to college at that age. He contracted fever in Holland and on his return to America was not strong enough to enter in the fall of 1904. After Christmas, he went to Andover for the rest of the year. During these preparatory years the man had begun to stir within him and the great strength of purpose and unselfishness which characterized him were assuming definite proportions in his character. It was part of his father's plan of education to call on him for counsel while still a youngster and he shouldered with eagerness the responsibilities allotted him. In the fall of 1905 he entered college. He was picked as the best punter on the football squad and sprang at once into an athletic prominence which continued during his four years at Harvard. After the football season, he was elected president of the freshman class. In the spring he took up baseball and played on the University nine in the important games. Before he was graduated he had tried all the major sports with success. In the last two years of his course he was a shot-putter on the track team and a member of the tennis team as well. One year he worked with the crew squad and might have been given a chance in one of the University boats had he devoted all his time to it. For the first three years in college football was distasteful to him. A nervousness and susceptibility to colds which laid hold of him made it difficult for him to keep in condition while training. It was not until he was elected captain of the eleven that he conquered the infirmity and subordinated all in the interest of his players. In this last year of his athletic career, the team won a notable victory from Yale by the score of 4-0. In this game he was prevented from playing by a painful injury, received toward the end of the season. No better idea of his unselfish devotion to Harvard can be obtained than by noting the facts in that situation. The doctors had given a half-hearted consent to his playing and the decision lay with the captain and coaches. Burr declared himself out of the matter entirely and ordered the coaches to consider nothing but the efficiency of the team in choosing between himself, slightly crippled as he was, and his substitutes. They chose the substitute and he watched the game from the side lines. It was the greatest disappointment of his life to be deprived of playing against Yale that year. Burr's activities were by no means confined to athletics. He was a splendid scholar, receiving a Harvard College Scholarship his senior year and taking his degree of Bachelor of Arts with distinction. No undergraduate was more in touch with members of the Administration and influential alumni than he and no man lent his influence more unreservedly to any movement which aimed at the correction of abuses and the attainment of higher standards, intellectual as well as moral, than he did. The class honored him in senior year again by choosing him for the office of First Marshal. The year following his graduation he studied at the Harvard Law School and it was while in attendance at the Law School, during the fall of 1910, that he contracted the typhoid fever to which he succumbed on December 4th, after a long struggle, exhausted in strength, but not in courage. Burr had no vanity. His father, who was his best friend, frequently heard of honors conferred upon him or of enterprises in which he was prominently engaged from others. He possessed unusually broad and mature judgment for an undergraduate, to some extent attributable to his ability to place himself in the other man's position. His classmates admired him and loved him. They mourn the loss of their First Citizen for his place cannot be filled.

WILLIAM EDWARD COALE, the only son of George Oliver George and Elizabeth Atkinson Coale, was born at Jamaica Plain, Mass., on January 4, 1887. He moved with his family to Cambridge, Mass., in 1898, where he received his early education. He was prepared for college at the Stone School, Boston, Mass. Here he took an active part in athletics, playing on the football team and making the track team and crew. He entered the Lawrence Scientific School in September, 1905, with the class of 1909. The examinations and the preparation for them were done under the shadow of physical disabilities, however, and the early promise of a strong and vigorous manhood was soon obscured by disheartening and painful illness which compelled him to drop his college work temporarily in January of the freshman year. After some months in the White Mountains and a summer motor-cycle trip in Europe with a classmate in the hope of regaining his health through rest and recreation, he was obliged to give up all hope of college work owing to his physical condition. Unwilling to be an idler during 1906-1907, he devoted himself to music and to the training of his voice which was of excellent quality and in 1907-1908 took a few special courses at Noble and Greenough's School, Boston. In September, 1908, he went to Detroit, Mich., entering the employ of the Packard Automobile Company. He was advancing steadily, showing excellent ability and great adaptability to the requirements of his work when his bodily health again forced him to step aside from the line of the world's active workers and compelled him to return to Cambridge, where he died on February 28, 1909, at the age of twenty-two. Although he was quiet and reserved by nature, his winning and attractive personality, his earnestness, and purity of mind and character won him many warm friends not only among his schoolmates and those whom he met in college, but also among those with whom he was thrown during his few months in Detroit. To those who knew him intimately, the unfailing cheerfulness and courage with which he met the crushing disappointments of being obliged to give up his college life and later his business career on the threshold of success are a lasting memory and inspiration.

JAMES J. GREENOUGH.

ROGER FERGUSON CONANT was born at Pawtucket, R. I., April 12, 1888, being the first born to Samuel Morris and Nelly Ferguson Conant, and grandson of Hezekiah Conant (1827-1892), a prominent thread manufacturer and business man of Rhode Island. Roger Ferguson Conant received his preparatory education at the University School of Providence, and the Browne and Nichols School of Cambridge. He entered Harvard in the fall of 1905, in his eighteenth year; was operated upon for appendicitis the last of December of the same year, and died at Stillman Infirmary, Cambridge, December 27, 1905. Roger Ferguson Conant was named after the family immigrant ancestor, Governor Roger Conant of Cape Ann (1624-1628). He seemed to have inherited his grandfather Conant's peculiar aptitude for scientific and mechanical accomplishment. At the time of his death he was a faithful student, with these scientific and mechanical tendencies. His diversions in his home life were those of the naturalist and musician. He was an accomplished violinist for his years, and a member of the Pierian Sodality at the time of his death.

ERIC PEAK FIELD, son of Vernon Ashley and Mary Peak Field, was born September 19, 1887, and after passing through the grammar and high schools with credit, entered Harvard in 1905. Although quiet and retiring in disposition, his college and his class meant very much to him, and his loyalty to both was of the first order. He played on his high school football team, and was fond of, and ambitious in, athletics, but too light for college football. He was, however, on his class basketball team. He was a hard-working and conscientious student. In the academic year 1908-1909 he received the Harvard College Scholarship for work "of such excellence that it" was "deemed worthy of very high academic distinction." He received from the Harvard Club of Boston a certificate that was given to high rank scholars. He received the degree of A.B. in the same year. In December, 1907, Mr. Field was operated on for appendicitis, an apparently light case, as he returned to college in four weeks. In July, 1908, he was again in the hospital and operated on for water on the knee, and during that hot summer was five weeks in bed in a plaster cast. He returned to Harvard on crutches in the fall, but his vitality seemed to have been sapped by these operations. In the autumn of 1909 he entered the banking house of Paine, Webber and Company, but was obliged to give up on account of ill health in February, 1910. Late that year, after many weeks of rest, he entered the employ of the Old Colony Trust Company and was very happy in his work, in which he made good progress; but on July 4, 1911, contracted pneumonia from a swim at Marblehead, and after a three weeks' battle with this dread disease, died on July 27, 1911. He was patient and uncomplaining in his severe illnesses, and fortunately did not realize that his last was to result fatally. He was a member of the First Baptist Church in his home city of Chelsea, Mass., where he was born, lived his life on earth and passed on to his life in heaven. The following appeared August, 1911, in The Boston Banker—"Eric P. Field of the Reorganization Department of the Old Colony Trust Company, passed away July 27, 1911, after a severe attack of pneumonia. He was a Harvard man, and being young, his loss will be keenly felt by those who knew him best. Mr. Field was very quiet and industrious, and it is to regret and not forget the loss of one for whom no one has an ill word."

JAMES CLARKE GAVIN was born in Quincy, Mass., September 26, 1886. He prepared for college at Adams Academy, graduating in 1904. He did not enter college until 1905. In January, 1907, he was taken sick and died August 20 of that year. His courageous qualities shown throughout months of suffering will never be forgotten by his family and associates.

HOWARD ALVORD LELAND, the son of Rev. Willis Daniels Leland, Ph.D., Harvard 1876, and Susan Gridley (Alvord) Leland, was born in Weymouth, Mass., August 22, 1888. After spending the first three years of his life in Weymouth he went with his parents to Exeter, N. H., for a short time, where he first attended school at a private kindergarten. From there he moved to Lowell, Mass., entering the public schools. He graduated from the grammar school in 1900, and from the Lowell High School in 1904. After taking a post-graduate year at the high school he entered Harvard College in 1905, being just seventeen years old. He took his degree of A.B. at Harvard at the end of his third year, but remained in college the fourth year, doing graduate work in the business school and graduated with his class in 1909. During his freshman year in college his family moved from Lowell, Mass., to Newton, Mass., which became his home. After his graduation he went abroad with college friends for a three months' trip before settling down for his life work in business, for which he was so eager and so well fitted. Immediately on his return, in October, 1909, he was taken suddenly and violently ill. After a confinement of three months at home and some gain in health, he went to Saranac Lake, N. Y., hoping to find benefit, and there he remained, always cheerful, brave and hopeful until he passed away on October 24, 1911.

ROLAND ISBURGH LOTHROP, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Lothrop of Newtonville, was accidentally killed at South Londonderry, Vt., April 26, 1912. Mr. Lothrop had taken the degree of Master of Forestry at Harvard, and six months ago went into the lumber business for himself at South Londonderry. He was in his saw-mill, and as he was passing by the machinery some belting caught his coat, he was thrown heavily against some timbers, and though a physician was soon brought he died without regaining consciousness, in less than an hour. Mr. Lothrop was a graduate of the Newton High School, of Harvard College, class of 1909, and of the Harvard Graduate School of Forestry in 1911. He was also in the government forestry service in Colorado for a short time. His death at the very beginning of what promised to be an unusually successful business career was a terrible shock not only to his immediate family, but also to a large circle of friends. In the few months that he had been in Londonderry he had already made for himself a remarkable place in the esteem of the people. He had entered heartily into the civic and social and religious life of the community, and so deep was the impress he had made, that Sunday morning the Baptist Church he had attended held a memorial service in his honor. The burial was in Newton Cemetery.

KARL THOMAS MORSE was born in Fletcher, Vt., July 31, 1887. He moved with his parents when he was five years old to Bakersfield, Vt. He was educated in the common schools and Brigham Academy, where he was graduated with honors. After graduation he took a year of post-graduate work and had charge of the laboratory under the principal. He was also on the editorial staff of "The Bugle," a school paper. He entered the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard University in September, 1905, and was compelled by illness to give up his work at the University at the Easter vacation. He died of tuberculosis on August 9, 1906.

EDWARD RAWSON, JR., son of Edward Rawson and Clara Everett Hobart Rawson, was born at Cincinnati, O., November 2, 1887. He died at the Stillman Infirmary, March 27, 1907.

EVERETT NEWELL SMITH, son of Dr. Willard Everett Smith (Harvard A.B. and M.D.) and of Alice Lee Newell, was born in Boston, June 25th, 1888. After the death of his father in 1890, his mother and he moved to Framingham, Mass., where he died March 15, 1906. He was graduated from the Framingham High School, first scholar and valedictorian of his class, entering Harvard in the fall of 1905 with distinction. All indications pointed to a brilliant career because of his marked literary ability coupled with the tact, pluck and stick-to-it-iveness that, united, almost invariably lead to success. His short life was characterized throughout by unflinching cheerfulness, courage under affliction and a great personal magnetism which won for him many deep and lasting friendships.

M. S. WHEELER '94.

JOSEPH PRENTICE WILLETTS was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., on October 17, 1886, the son of Joseph Clarence and Emma Prentice Willetts. As a young boy he attended Miss Reynolds' School in New York City, where he stayed until ten years of age, when he entered the Cutler School, of which he was a member until 1899, at which time he entered St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H. During the five years in which he was at St. Paul's he played on the hockey team three years, rowed on the Shattuck Club crew and was a substitute on the regular school crew; he played on the Isthmian Club football team and was a member of the Cadmean Literary Society. He entered college in the fall of 1905. While at Cambridge he played on the University hockey team for four years, captaining it in his senior year, when the team won every game played. A great deal of the credit for this good showing was due to his personality which infused confidence into the other members of the team. In all the time that he played he always showed that absolute fearlessness which characterized his college life, and this was a great source of inspiration to the rest of the team. Even in his senior year, when the responsibility of the whole season rested on his shoulders, it never interfered with his ability to do his utmost in every game. After leaving college, Willetts entered, in the fall of 1909, the Syracuse Chilled Plow Company, where he worked, starting at the bottom, until the time of his death, which came as a result of typhoid fever, on June 29, 1910, after an illness of about six weeks. While in the factory of the Plow Company, he always reported for work at the same time with the other men, leaving home by the six o'clock car and returning after hours with his fellow workmen. It is said that he often shared his dinner with the more unfortunate men, who often had little or none for themselves, and made it a point to visit any workmen who were laid up in the hospital. In the recollection of the writer, who saw Willetts every day through three hockey seasons, he was always a warm and sympathetic friend, treating all men alike, irrespective of their position in life, and believing nothing bad about any one on mere hearsay. His nature was lovable, and though very widely known, he had no enemies. Every one who knew him will remember his pleasant manner and every-ready wit, with its constant good cheer; and his absolute lack of conceit or thought of himself. And those who did not know him well will remember him as a loyal classmate, who did his best for the college in his studies or his sport, and who, by his great courage and fearlessness, combined with his warm and lovable nature, set an example for all.
